AT LAST.

Whatever might be the legislation of Conress, however ready the obedience rendered that legislation by the Southern States, the public mind of the South could scarcely have looked forward with confidence to the work of econstruction while JEFFERSON DAVIS was held a prisoner of war in Fortress Monroe. For as long as that imprisonment continued there was not one man who had participated in the late civil contest who was not at any moment liable to a similar arrest. It is true that practically, he might be permitted to go freely about his business, and might safely calculate upon a public policy of forbearance in his individual case. It is true that one after another of the eminent men who had been imprisoned were released, but only so much the more distinctly did Mr. Davis become the representative of the South-a whole people were fettered in his chains and confined in his dungeon.

When, therefore, on last Monday, he was delivered by the military authorities into the custody of the civil Courts, when he stood as a freeman before a jury of his countrymen to defend his life, his fortune, and his sacred honor from an open charge, protected and aided by the principles of that common law which in all the history of our race has been a sure refuge against the pursuers of blood, then indeed we might rejoice that for us the first sad chapter in all civil revolutions had closed. Now indeed the day of vengeance has passed, and whatever justice may require it will be justice openly and fairly administered, without fear and without favor.

We think it, however, scarcely probable that Mr. Davis will be put upon his trial for treason. It is now fully two years since the word of peace went forth to all this "tortured land"-two years, since the victors in this long and bloody strife, amid the triumphant exultation of a saved and grateful people, marched proudly back through crowded highways and illuminated cities, to replace, in the National Capital, the banner which victory had glorified-and the vanquished returned sadly and wearily by desolated fields and burning ruins to homes in which the conqueror had left nothing sacred but sorrow. But in these years victory and defeat have both been are in course of translation into French and into teaching the lessons they always teach. Not completely yet, but surely and slowly is the American mind learning that in their great civil contest they have only been repeating the experience of other and older nations. That is seems to be one of the laws of national life that no people arrive at maturity without civil war, that this war was inevitable, and that earnest and patriotic men might well hold convictions as honest as they were different, and be constrained to the discharge of duties as strong as they were conflicting.

> Until the people of the North reach this conviction they will not fully have appreciated the magnitude of their own achievement. The historian who should to-day talk of Cromwell or BONAPARTE as traitors, would be considered by the world, and justly, as a very affected fool. That the royalists, at the Restoration, treated with ignominy the remains of the great Protector-that the legitimists should have executed Marshal Nev-is natural enough, because human passion, which executes God's will, very seldom understands God's purpose. But what Englishman or Frenchman, rejoicing in the glory and power of his country, would refer to either act of cruel injustice as making treason odious. In this country as in those, two great parties, holding different views of the character of their Governments, reached, as all such parties will do, after years of controversy, a point of final issue. With equal heroism and endurance they fought over that issue, and one was conquered: and however the personal bitterness, which every such contest engenders, may, for the moment, distort the truth, yet history will find that friend and foe have only been working to one common

We believe that the release of Mr. Davis is the first recognition of this truth, and that sooner or later the Northern people will recognize the great fact, that the result of this war has settled the character of their Government. has solved questions which have been in doubt from the beginning of its existence and has made of these United States a Government to which in the future the loyal obedience of a whole people will render treason odious.

While for the country we hope that the release of Mr. Davis is the dawn of a brighter and better day, for him we rejoice with a joy unfeigned. With his release from Fortress Monroe, his great career has ended. Henceforth he belongs to history. He must expect that as time passes by, men will ask why in his hands a great cause failed? Whether to him or to its inherent weakness it was owing, that great armies in vain achieved heroic victories, that the blood and treasure of what might well be called a great nation was poured out uselessly, that a self-sacrificing enthusiasm which has never been surpassed died away in despair? History will ask these questions-let history answer them.

To us, he is sacred from censure. He was our chosen chief. In our hour of proudest hope we felt that he was worthy of the place we gave him, and in our hour of darkest gloom his worn and handcuffed figure was the symbol of our endurance. During all the weary months since the close of the war, while we have been trying to rebuild our fortunes, he has paced his narrow dungeon; the memories of the past have been with him in the stillness of midnight, and the burden of the great responsibility we put upon him has weighed upon his spirit. Whatever may have been the errors of his judgment, we believe that he was sustained by the conviction that he had been true to the cause he loved and to the people who loved

And to-day, wherever his declining years may be spent, he can feel assured that throughout this suffering land-in its cities scarred with fire-in its vallies where the grass is growing green over a thousand graves-on the hill side where the old Confederate soldier stops his the homes where mothers mourn their first where and from all has the prayer gone up to will rest upon the head of him who was the General of our hosts, although they were scattered, and the Chief of our counsel, although it was broken.

OUR ADVISERS.

The Baltimore Gazette is indignant at ournals, both Northern and Southern, that counsel submission to the reconstruction acts of Congress. It can see no reason why the Southern States should submit. And by way of fortifying its position, it goes to work to show that Congress had not the shadow of right or authority in the premises. This may or may not be the case, but, under existing circumstances, is scarcely to the purpose. From the line of argument, usually followed by our Northern Democratic exchanges, we can hardly consider them fair judges in the case. We will not say that in their situation we might not argue as they do, but then they must pardon us for inclining strongly to the belief, that in our place they might possibly look at the situation very much as we do. We fought this fight without their help, and it would seem, herefore, that we should now be allowed to settle the difficulty according to the best dictates of our own judgment.

SOUTHERN EXPRESS PANY SHE REVALS SECRETS NO MORTAL EVER RNEW.

She restores to happiness those who, from doleful events, catastrophes, crosses in love, loss of relations and friends, loss of money, &c., have become despondent. She brings together those long separated, gives information concerning absent friends or lovers, restores lost or stolen property, tells you the business you are best qualified to pursue and in what you will be most successful, causes speedy marriages, and tells you the very day you will marry, gives you the names, likeness and characteristics of the person. She reads your very thoughts, and by her almost supernatural powers, unvalls the dark and hidden mysteries of the future. From the stars we see in the firmament—the malefic stars that overcome or pre-tominate in the configuration—from the aspects and positions of the planets and the fixed stars in the heavens at the time of birth, she deduces the future destiny of man.
